Gains of $56,000 and a Stunning Condo on Tulum's "Golden Mile"

A deal 18 months in the making finally comes together. A killer deal… amazing.

Then in just a couple of days it gets even better…

Originally, our screaming low RETA-only price was from $144,000. That's insane. That's $144,000 for a luxury two-bed, two-bath condo in Tulum's newly emerging "Golden Mile."

But now there's more…

I just got us an additional $10,000 off our RETA-only pricing on stunning two-bed condos in Tulum…

Knock another $10,000 off.

That's right…I've just snagged us an additional $10,000 off our RETA-only price…

Our price is now from a crazy low $134,000. (Plus there's attractive payment terms and exclusive financing for RETA members.)

When I open this deal on Tuesday, October 6, at 1 p.m. ET, get on the phone and call the reservations team fast. I expect a massive response to what is one of our best deals yet.

I figure these stunning condos will be worth $190,000 just three years after delivery—a gain of $56,000. I think the rental potential is enormous, certainly double-digit yields. And these condos will be a stunning place to spend time yourself…

Our deal is amazing, made even better because:

- The U.S. dollar has risen against the Mexico peso and we buy in dollars.
- The developer pays his construction costs in pesos and his costs have dropped.
- Our group buying power and our track record mean we can get the developer to pass on those savings to us…

Then there's the developer financing and payment terms—exclusive to RETA. We can own from just $749 a month.

At $144,000 these condos are a screaming buy…a deal only we have, exclusive to RETA. An opportunity to lock in potential gains of $56,000 and do it with financing exclusive to RETA members.

But at $134,000 there are not words to describe how good a deal it is… try mind-blowing…extraordinary…astounding.

And we have spacious garden units that were a crazy low RETA-only price of $180,000…

Now yours for only $170,000…

As in past deals I expect the more premium units to appreciate at a faster rate. And to give you an idea of how insanely good our RETA-only prices are, the last time I looked at a condo for sale in the neighborhood where we have our opportunity it was just 330 square feet and had an asking price of $210,000.

The condos we can buy Tuesday, October 6, at 1 p.m. ET range from 867 square feet to 1,400 square feet including terrace...

All in a stunning community on Tulum's newly emerging "Golden Mile…"

Ground-Floor Profits on the Golden Mile

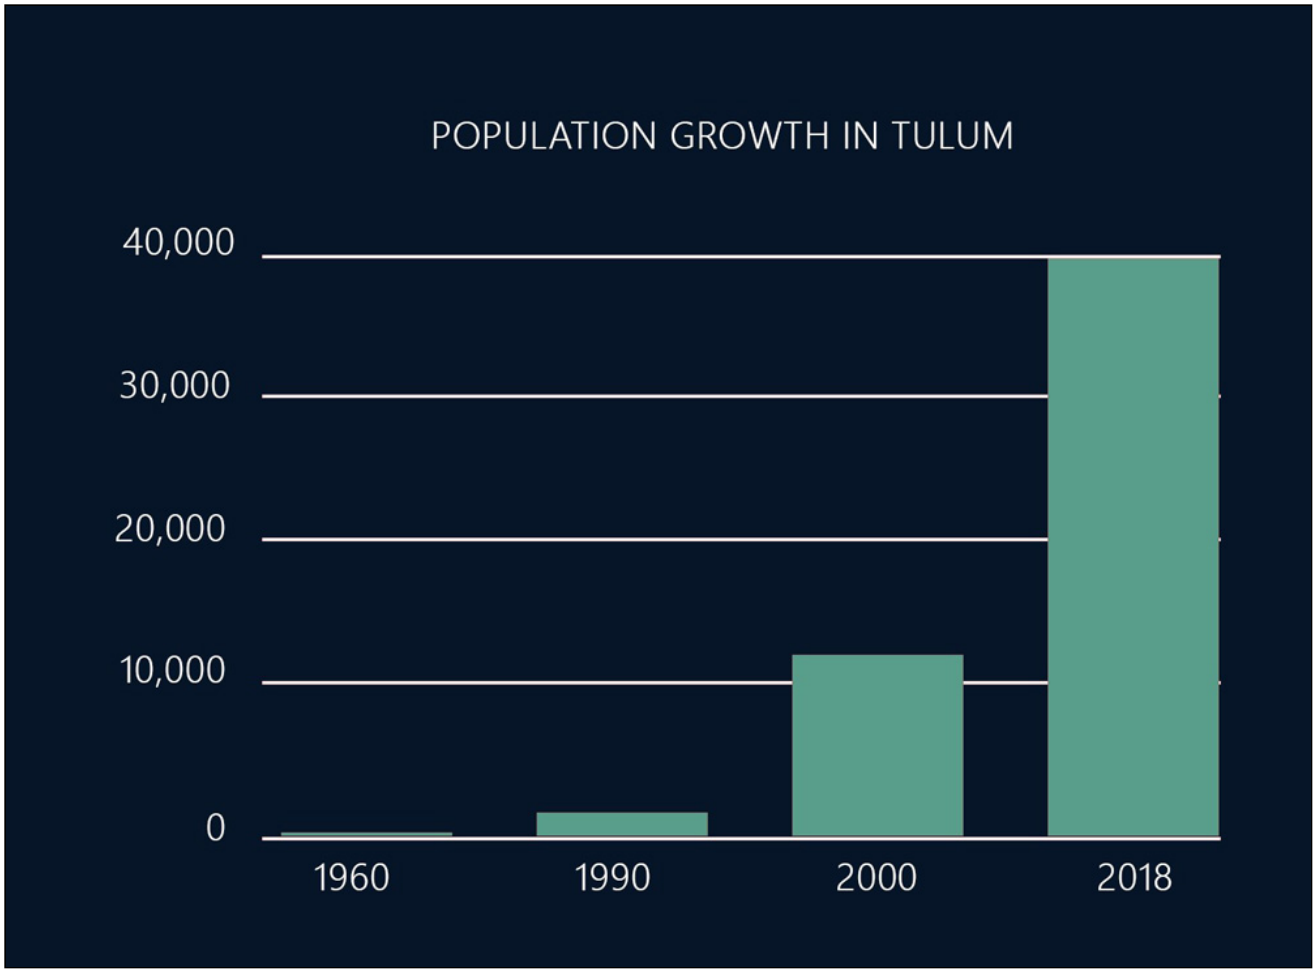

The beach at Tulum sets the standard for Caribbean beach bliss…stretching 26 miles into a UNESCO-protected biosphere.

You could say it started with thatched huts on the beach. And what a beach…brilliant white-powder sand washed by the mesmerizing Caribbean. Year-round tropical warmth, soothing sea breezes, and a laidback, low-key vibe.

When the hippies ventured south to the jungle-framed sands of Tulum in the 1960's there was nothing but this incredible beach. Even today it retains that rustic "castaway" vibe.

Tulum has been attracting a well-heeled wellness set for years—joined by vacationers from all sorts of places and backgrounds. You'll get some idea when you hear that last year two million people visited the archaeological ruins at Tulum. Young, old…from Europe, the U.S., Canada, Latin America…Tulum is no secret anymore.

Tulum is one of the fastest growing towns on the planet thanks to its location at the end of one of the world's most spectacular Paths of Progress.

Getting your head around the explosive growth is difficult. It's been so rapid. In 1960 there were 92 people living in Tulum. In 1990 there were 2,000.

By the year 2000 there were 12,000 and last count (2018) it was more like 40,000 residents.

I first visited Tulum in 2004. There was just one ATM and a few dusty streets, and the stunning beach.

What I really noticed was that this was truly the end of the line. Tulum is nestled next to over 1,000 square miles of UNESCO-protected biosphere called Sian Ka'an. Shimmering lagoons, deserted Caribbean beaches, wildlife-rich wetlands…all on your doorstep.

The Path of Progress ends in Tulum because of the biosphere.

The UNESCO-protected Sian Ka'an Biosphere means Tulum is the end of the line for the Path of Progress.

The Riviera Maya is 80 miles of stunning Caribbean coast and the Path of Progress along it has been one of the most phenomenal and rapid the world's ever seen. Entire cities have burst into existence in the space of a few decades.

In the late 1960s Cancun was a coconut plantation. In 1974 its airport opened. Last year Cancun Airport's four terminals saw 25.4 million passengers. It's the gateway to the Riviera Maya.

About 50 minutes south of Cancun, the fishing village of Playa del Carmen has become a sophisticated beachside city with over 200,000 residents and millions of visitors…it has large malls, an international dining scene, box stores, and a very international community. In a city so new everyone is from somewhere else. English is spoken everywhere.

This has happened so fast it's mind blowing. In 2007 Playa del Carmen was the world's fastest-growing city…today I think that title could easily go to Tulum.

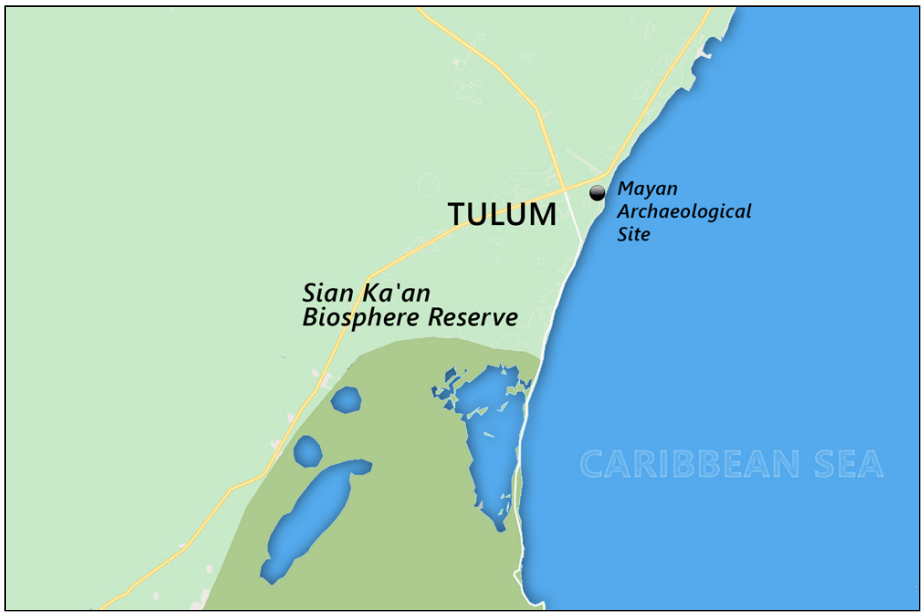

By following the Path of Progress on the Riviera Maya and using our group buying power RETA members have had killer deals.

I reckon I spend more time scouting the Riviera Maya than anywhere else. That's how powerful the opportunities are. And on every single visit I find new buildings, restaurants, cafés, bars, amenities, roads… especially in Tulum where the pace of development has now picked up pace.

Tulum is another 50 minutes' drive or so from Playa del Carmen on a smooth modern highway (not long ago a bumpy road). And like I say, because of the biosphere Tulum is where the Path of Progress ends.

On top of this there's "the squeeze" which creates a geographic moat around any smart investment in Tulum. Let's look at a map…

To the south is the biosphere, on the other side of town the protected archaeological ruins and in front is the Caribbean… there is a very limited supply of developable land to meet the huge demand.

You can't build near the archaeological ruins nor can you build in the biosphere. And development on the beach will always be severely restricted. I hear that the Secretariat of the Environment blocked the construction of a 520-room resort in northern Tulum in for example. There's also very little titled beachfront land. (This also means that the beach will retain its rustic laidback vibe.)

The bottom line is that land is at a premium. It also means that Tulum will retain its boutique eco-chic feel. Buildings here are low-rise, the regulations limit building height to ground floor plus three floors.

The Riviera Maya is excellent at compartmentalizing markets…and Tulum is the kind of place where folks can pay $400 or more to stay off the grid close to the beach and buy a pair of designer sunglasses for $1,000.

That doesn't mean the market isn't evolving as Tulum grows. For instance this is the ideal location for the growing number of work-from-anywhere folks no longer tied to an office. I was last in Tulum in February. It feels more and more like a small city. It's busy. And as an investor I love this because our focus is on the kind of best-in-class high-end communities that offer an oasis of tranquility and luxury.

As Tulum grows, owning real estate that is rare, discreet, and exclusive sets us up beautifully for explosive rental demand and for rapid potential for gains. The high-end fashion set that love Tulum will want your condo, and so will the growing number of folks coming longer-term.

The condos we can lock down this Tuesday, October 6, at 1 p.m. ET from just $134,000 are ideal…

Let me show you Tulum's emerging "Golden Mile…"

I haven't talked much about the neighborhood of La Veleta before but I've spent a lot of time there. Two roads frame Tulum, the beach road—a three-mile stretch between town and the beach area—and Avenida Kukulkan, which almost reaches the beach.

Veleta is at the start of Avenida Kukulkan and it smells and looks brand new. It's becoming chic, super trendy. It's this avenue that I believe is just emerging as the Golden Mile of Tulum.

This is where the smart money is going, betting big on Tulum's growth. Many of the Riviera Maya's top developers are land banking here. The main avenue has a few potholes and much of the land is as yet untouched. Drive along and you'll see a lot of virgin jungle with the occasional flashy luxury condo building popping up.

But drive it in the right company and you get the full picture…

I've driven it with various contacts including someone connected with the permitting process. He was able to point out land all over the place connected with the many big groups planning to develop here. In fact, I reckon the potholes might get worse as construction takes off along this avenue.

From the emerging Golden Mile, a side entrance into the Aldea Zama master-planned community gives easy access to the plush commercial area there. You can drive straight through Aldea Zama onto the beach road and down to the beach itself. (It takes just 15 minutes to get to the beach from where we have our opportunity this Tuesday.)

Tulum's emerging "Golden Mile" is just 15 minutes' drive to the beach.

Tulum only has one road to the beach. The general view is it needs another one and the only contender is Avenida Kukulkan, the road leading from Veleta almost to the beach.

You can't reach the beach on this road.

We shouldn't buy on the basis that this road will open. Maybe it does, maybe it doesn't. It doesn't matter…that's just gravy to us.

Veleta's prime location and trajectory as the high-end commercial area of Tulum is our reason to buy…as is our incredible low RETA-only price.

We're buying in a Grade A location at pricing that reflects our buying power.

Next Tuesday, October 6 at 1 p.m. ET we can lock down a two-bed, two-bath condo from just $134,000. Spacious garden units are ours for just $170,000.

Remember, I've just snagged us an additional $10,000 off our RETA-only price and honestly, I don't know how long that's going to last.

I do know that I'm confident in figuring that condos we can lock down for $134,000 will be worth $190,000 three years after delivery. And as in the past, I expect premium condos to appreciate at a faster rate. Our Tulum deals to date our proof of that…

3 Years of Killer Deals in Tulum

I'm the owner of multiple properties in Tulum. I've bought in the last three of our RETA-only deals there. But finding deals in Tulum is not easy…

The right developable land is hard to come by for all the reasons that the right real estate is so valuable. Tulum is squeezed between the natural beauty of the biosphere, the magnificent Maya archaeological site, and the Caribbean.

Plus we are very particular—at RETA we want only the very best-in-class in the perfect location at a killer RETA-only low price.

These factors make any deal in Tulum all the more precious and rare.

I first visited Tulum in 2004 and I kept going back. For a long time though, the market was at too early a stage. There were some wealthy folks building condos for friends and family, but nothing that stacked up as a RETA deal.

We got busy as the market hit the next level. In October 2017, I brought RETA members the opportunity to buy in the Tao Tulum community from $154,500. Just a few months ago I accepted an offer for $225,000 on the condo I bought as part of that deal. That $225,000 is probably a bit less than market price. That’s fine. My personal philosophy is that I’ll take any offer that is double the amount of cash invested.

As for premium condos, with that Tao Tulum deal RETA members could snap up those for just $230,556. This time last year a price list crossed my desk and a premium condo in Tao Tulum was listing for $449,000. That's $218,444 more.

Here's a selfie I took last year checking out construction at Tao Tulum in the Aldea Zama master-planned community in Tulum.

Our next deal was in May 2019 with Gran Tulum, a chance to own in the closest master-planned community to Tulum beach from just $175,000. I reserved a premium condo at $214,600. I wanted something extra special with a big terrace and a view into lush foliage and the heart of the community...a truly stunning condo that will have the strongest appeal to the high-end market driving demand for rentals in Tulum.

Other projects set to become our neighbors are big names…great projects from the highest-end developers in the area. It looks like their two-bed pricing is set to start at more than 50% higher than our RETA-only price, per square foot. Anyone buying from one of the other projects will likely get a studio for the same price as RETA members and I paid for a premium two-bed in Gran Tulum.

I also bought in our last Tulum deal—the opportunity to own spacious two-bed homes in Edena for just $149,000. For us to see a gain there of $70,000 or even $100,000, which in many cases is a double or more of our cash invested—all that needs to happen is that the value of our property needs to catch up to the entry level of what our competitors sell at. And just as with our upcoming deal in La Veleta we had incredible financing exclusive to RETA…

The payment terms on offer to RETA members next Tuesday, October 6, means you can own with $749 a month. And payments don’t start until Novem. (More on this financing in a moment.)

For us to get something in La Veleta at our RETA-only price is unheard of. And then to top that with an additional $10,000 off is just stupendous.

Tulum beach…perfect for a morning swim…just a 15-minute drive from our latest opportunity.

As I've said, the last condo I looked at for sale in La Veleta was a two-minute drive from where we have our opportunity and had an asking price of $210,000. It was just 330 square feet. The condos we can buy next Tuesday at 1 p.m. ET range from 867 square feet to 1,400 square feet including terrace...

The developer behind this community is the crème da la crème…at the very top of their game. They can offer pricing like this and still be a strong business because they have accumulated one of the most enviable land banks across the two full generations of the development of the Riviera Maya. They started out in the first wave of hotel development in Cancun. And, managed to always invest ahead of the path of progress along the Riviera.

Who Are We Dealing With?

Eloy Caceres grew up watching his parents carve out a successful business with beachfront hotels. His family's story is intertwined with the growth of the Riviera Maya. Today, Eloy and his partners head a group called SIMCA. Nearly 20 years ago they began buying land in Playa del Carmen. Since then, they have delivered 27 residential projects there. They are one of the Riviera Maya's top developers, and the developer behind our Gran Tulum opportunity. (That's not the only incredible deal we've negotiated with Eloy and his team. RETA members have done well in Playa del Carmen for instance.)

Eloy's wall is adorned with design awards earned by his projects. His group has the mind-set that the first rule of development is to ensure the viability of their community. As is the second…and the third.

And I really like the fact that he and his family have ridden out many storms before...in 2008 it was the Financial Crisis…2009 it was the swine flu pandemic…and there were more going back to before Playa del Carmen was a thriving international city and Tulum was a world-famous jet-set locale. He's seasoned, strong, and smart about how he does business.

They have built a strong reputation with hip international buyers. Italians, Spanish, Mexico City, and U.S. buyers have purchased SIMCA condos for vacation use.

SIMCA also set up their own rental management company. They realized that many of their buyers wanted to rent their condos out when they weren't using them. Eloy's group felt it was better to manage that in-house rather than farm it out to local agents, who can be hit and miss. Today, they are established and their occupancy figures are impressive.

Because they were among the earliest players on the Riviera Maya SIMCA have one of the best land banks on the entire coast. They were acquiring land when it was cheap.

That gives our RETA group a huge margin for negotiation. More recent developers coming into the market can face land costs that are 20% of the sales value. But Eloy and his SIMCA group have the room to do a deal…

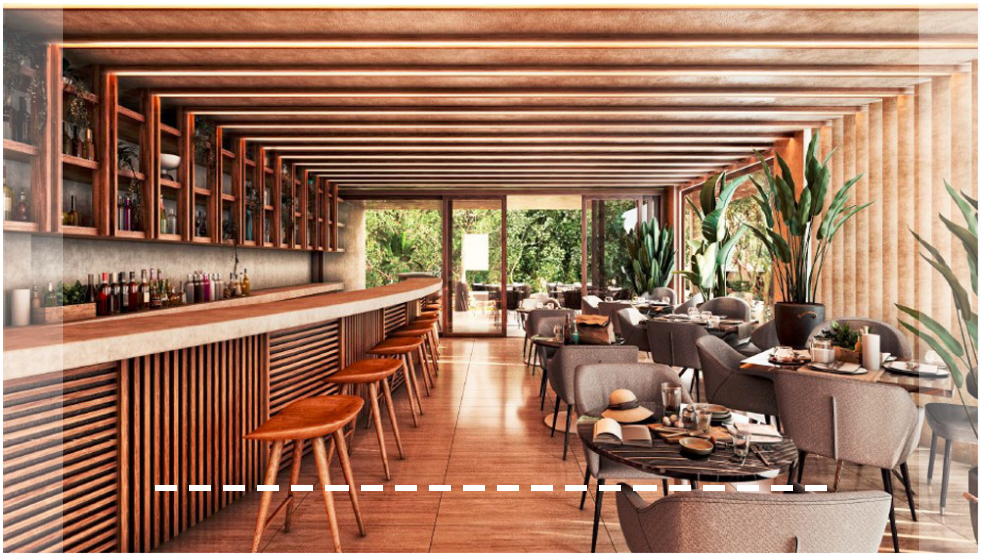

Not only can they bend to our group buying power and give us an incredible RETA-only low price, but they can be more creative and daring with design and construction materials. In other words, they can spend more money creating something super special…something unique and of the highest quality.

And they’re doing it again…

Introducing Natal…

Centered on an internal oasis, the high-end community of Natal promises to be something special. It's completely in tune with the Tulum market and its evolution with marble finishes, a swim-up bar, co-working space, swish café, children's area, events salon, state-of-the-art gym…a fire pit…

One especially nice touch is that plans call for things to be centered on the internal oasis where a palapa-style bar and pool area acts as a pivot. That means whatever happens in terms of the rapid growth and construction of this emerging Golden Mile it won't impact on your view into the heart of this lush community. Here are some renders Eloy sent through…as always, don't think of renders as final, but they are the vision the developer has…

It's incredible to get a luxury two-bed, two-bath condo in a community of this caliber in such a prime location for the price we're paying.

It's because of Eloy and his group's long legacy of savvy land banking on the Riviera Maya that I can successfully get us such style and amenities from just $134,000.

And remember, our screaming low RETA-only price was from $144,000. That's already insanely low. Remember, last time I looked at a condo for sale around Veleta it was just 330 square feet and had an asking price of $210,000. The condos we can buy next Tuesday at 1 p.m. ET range from 867 square feet to 1,400 square feet including terrace...

But I snagged us an additional $10,000 off our RETA-only price because the U.S. dollar has risen against the Mexican peso. We buy in dollars and the developer pays his construction costs in pesos. Since his costs have dropped I've been able to use our group buying power and our track record to get the developer to pass on those savings to us…

So we can own from just $134,000….

And there's exclusive payment terms for RETA members which means payments of just $749 a month. You don't even have to start payments until November.

I figure these stunning condos will be worth $190,000 just three years after delivery—a gain of $56,000.

And because of this $10,000 additional discount we have spacious garden units for only $170,000.

Word to the wise, as in past deals I expect the more premium units to appreciate at an even faster rate. This, as I've said, is how it played out in Tao Tulum where I bought along with RETA members in October 2017. The RETA-only price was from $154,500 and I sold recently for $225,000. The RETA-only price for premium condos there was $230,556 and last year I saw one listing for $449,000. A whopping $218,444 in gains.

There's enormous rental potential too. And thanks to the pandemic a great trend acceleration is beginning which will help drive our potential yields…

The Great Trend Accelerator

Back in 2018, only 12% of Americans, given the choice, said they would choose to live in a big city. The majority said they wanted something more rural…with lower costs and a better quality of life.

As 2019 came to a close, it was reported that hundreds of workers were leaving the biggest U.S. cities every day. They left for places they could find lower taxes, no commute, cheaper housing, lower costs, bigger homes, gardens…

The tools of the digital revolution were already in the hands of millions of people. The trend in Work from Home (WFH) was growing fast. And many people had long ago discovered it was really "work from anywhere." For years on my travels I've met mobile people with flexible jobs working online…a few months in Portugal…a few months in Mexico…

Only one thing stood in the way of anyone who could do their job remotely: the culture of work. You had to turn up…to physically be somewhere.

Then the Coronavirus pandemic and lockdown happened. An emerging trend became a mass movement, the new normal for millions of people almost overnight.

A lot of folks are waking up to the possibilities. Why pay thousands in rent and commute long hours when you can do your job after a daily morning jog on a Caribbean beach and save a whole lot of money living somewhere warm?

Tulum or traffic…Because of the Covid-19 crisis millions more people are beginning to work from anywhere. This plays into our hands.

As for employers…why rent an expensive downtown office when you don't have to? There can be big savings and advantages to running a remote company if you do it right. (My team and I are all fully remote.)

At the start of this year, the average monthly rent in the Bay Area of San Francisco sat at $3,680. In May, two-thirds of tech workers in the Bay Area told researchers they would move if given the choice.

Now many of those workers have that choice...

Twitter has told employees that most of them would be allowed to work from home permanently. Coinbase and Square have done the same.

Facebook announced a decade-long plan for remote work, Google is making arrangements, too.

It's not just tech giants in San Fran…go to any big city in the world and the same pattern is emerging…

Let's take a few events from the last couple of weeks…

- The venerable U.S. clothing brand Brooks Brothers filed for bankruptcy. You don't need a suit if you're not in the office.
- Japanese tech company Fujitsu launched a plan for their 80,000 employees to work remotely forever.
- In the UK and Ireland manufacturers and suppliers of ready-built offices (the kind you can drop into your yard or outside space) can't keep up with demand…
- Barbados is one of the first countries to seize the opportunity when the prime minister announced a "12-month Barbados Welcome Stamp," which would allow visitors from overseas to stay for an entire year and work remotely. Expect more of this sort of thing…

There are places in the world that already attract millions of people for their climate, lower costs, and quality of life. The most successful are easy to get to.

The Riviera Maya is now firmly among the world's most inherently desirable destinations. It has it all…perfect weather, world-class beaches, fine dining, and almost every activity you can imagine. That's just for vacationers.

The increasing number of longer-stay folks have every amenity they need as well, including international schools for their kids, gourmet supermarkets, and so on.

And it's so easy to get there. The airlift is phenomenal. Cancun Airport is unrecognizable from when I first began visiting and scouting this 80-mile stretch of Caribbean coast. The number of active airlines varies over time but from 50 to 70 airlines operate from Cancun airport, with around 130 total destinations (about 100 international).

That translates to one of the strongest markets on the RETA beat for rentals. Peak season is getting longer and longer as more tourists visit from across the globe. Premium season—the holidays—sees the best rentals snapped up months in advance.

That's why…with the right type of property in the right location on the Riviera Maya…you can get fantastic rental returns.

And it means for anyone in the U.S. or Canada flying to Cancun and spending time on the Riviera Maya is akin to a domestic flight.

A couple of months ago, with the U.S. in the grip of crisis, online travel company Expedia released data showing that Americans are ready to travel again and that Cancun is among the top five destinations they are searching for flights. It makes sense. Flying to Cancun is as easy as it gets, and the beaches and attractions of the Riviera Maya and Tulum as stunning as they come.

What stood out to me though…of the top 10 most-searched-for flights, only two were international…London and Cancun. And when it comes to hotel searches, the Riviera Maya just dominates...

The Riviera Maya attracts millions of vacationers. Now it's going to attract many more longer-term renters. Many of the international and mobile people that you already find in Playa del Carmen will now appear in even great numbers in Tulum…

The condos we can lock down this Tuesday, October 6, at 1 p.m. ET are slated for delivery in spring 2023. By then I expect we'll be back traveling and millions of folks will have the type of location flexibility my team and I have. Their work will no longer be tied to rigid place and time of work. I like the play of renting six months of the year at a rate of $60 per night but with a minimum stay of a month. So, $1,800 per month. Then in January and February I'd rent by the night at an average of $150 per night. That's 50 nights for a total of $7,500 plus our $1,800 a month multiplied by six…annual total income $18,300.

And we can own these stunning condos with a manageable down payment, some balloons and monthly payments of just $749 ….

RETA Payment Terms & Exclusive Financing

Walk into a bank in Mexico and if you are very lucky, they might lend you money. But it's not easy and the rates are not attractive. If they do lend you money it's only after they're done weighing you down with excruciating bureaucratic requirements.

But, this is where our RETA members-only payment terms and developer finance comes in...

Developer finance is, as the name suggests, where a developer finances a piece of the real estate you buy from him—he's the bank.

It's a rare thing…unless of course you are a member of RETA. When I negotiate our members-only pricing and terms I also ask for developer finance. Only the strong developers can do this. And, they only are willing to do it when the incentives are big. Access to our group is a big incentive.

That's why SIMCA offers special finance to RETA members.

And with our deal in Veleta it works like this:

To reserve your condo next Tuesday, October 6 at 1 p.m. ET, you give a fully refundable $5,000 deposit. That locks down your condo. You then have 15 days do your due diligence, get an attorney and sign your private purchase contract. My step-by-step guide on how to do all this is below. You close on your condo with another $5,000.

Your payment plan starts on November 30. You pay up to 20% of the purchase price. So that is the $10,000 you have already paid plus whatever amount is needed to bring you up to full payment to 20% of the purchase price.

For instance, for the spacious garden condos at a RETA-only price of $170,000, you'll only need to pay another $24,000 before November 30. (Because 20% of the total equals $34,000.)

On November 30, your payment plan starts with monthly payments of $749 and a few balloon payments along the way.

When your condo is delivered, you'll have paid a total of 50% of the purchase price. At this stage, your condo will be move-in ready…for you to enjoy…or rent out.

You can either clear the 50% balance owed in cash or take up the exclusive-to-RETA developer finance on offer.

The developer finance will let you spread the remaining 50% balance over five years.

For more details on the payment terms and developer finance talk to Eloy and his team next Tuesday, October 6, at 1 p.m. ET when I open the deal…

A deal like this…at this low price…it goes fast. On Tuesday, October 6 at 1 p.m. ET I will open this deal. And you will need to be ready…

So I've put together a step-by-step guide for how to act on it…

How to Lock Down Your Condo

DEAL OPENS ON OCTOBER 6 AT 1 P.M. ET.

Prepare for "Deal Open" Alert

ACT FAST ON OCTOBER 6 AT 1 P.M. ET.

Pay close attention to your RETA alerts for all the details of the deal and Ronan's analysis. Ronan will open the deal on October 6 at 1 p.m. ET.

Prepare to act fast on the deal by having your credit card on hand to make the refundable deposit. Have your proof of address and a copy of your passport ready too.

Reserve Your Condo

CALL ELOY AND HIS TEAM IMMEDIATELY

At 1 p.m. ET on October 6 Ronan will send you an alert. Open the email and click the link inside. You'll be asked to enter your contact details. Make sure to include your phone number.

Do it and you will then get an email with the phone number of Eloy and his team. Call them straight away and reserve your condo with a $5,000 fully refundable deposit. You'll be asked to complete a straightforward reservation form to confirm the refundable nature of your deposit.

Ask Your Questions

DAY 2

Review the material the team give you. This will include renderings, floor plans, a video, and other materials. Take note of all your questions as you review these materials so that you can discuss with Eloy and the team.

In-Depth Call

DAY 2-3

In-depth call with your dedicated advisor. Have all your questions to hand to discuss with your advisor. Finalize your preferred payment plan.

Get Your Attorney

DAY 2-3

Eloy and his team can introduce you to a local attorney. On the Riviera Maya I use Ivan Castillo. (You can email him at icastillo@stla.net.) Ivan is familiar with RETA and is used to working with RETA members. Review all materials provided by the attorney so that you can decide if the attorney is for you.

Get Your Contract

DAY 4-5

The developer will give you your personalized contract. This contract will include your personal details, specific information on the condo you're buying, and your proposed payment plan.

Review your contract carefully and note down any questions you have.

Put Your Attorney to Work

DAY 6-9

Connect with your lawyer. You can ask preliminary questions about your personalized contract at this point. Once engaged, your attorney will review all documents and contracts necessary for you to complete your purchase.

Sign Your Contract

DAY 9-10

Agree with your attorney and advisor on the final version of your personalized contract. Once your attorney gives the go ahead, your advisor will issue you with the final agreed contract that is to be signed. Exchange signed contracts with the developer and arrange your closing payment as outlined in your contract. Pay the outstanding balance of $5,000.

Congratulations. You are now an owner in Natal on Tulum's emerging Golden Mile!

Like I say, I've created a PDF version of this step-by-step guide so you can print it out and have it close at hand.

Legal Disclaimer: Transparency is important to us. So you should know that properties and development projects detailed here may be clients of Pangaea Limited trading as Pangea, a real estate advertising company managed by Ronan McMahon and Margaret Summerfield, whose adverts appear in International Living Publishing Ltd publications. Should you purchase a property from one of the developers or real estate brokers you read about, Pangaea Ltd. may receive an advertising fee from developers and real estate agents mentioned in these pages and International Living Publishing Ltd., along with certain marketing companies who contract directly with Pangaea Ltd., may receive a portion of that fee.

Nothing in this report should be considered personalized investment advice. Although our employees may answer your general customer service questions, they are not licensed under U.S. securities laws to address your particular investment situation. No communication by our employees to you should be deemed as personalized investment advice.

Remember, the value of your real estate purchase and/or the income derived from such real estate can go down as well as up; there are no guarantees that values will rise. Properties purchased in a foreign currency are also subject to currency fluctuations which may affect the property value, income derived from it, and/or gains.

Should a reader decide to purchase a property from one of the developers, real estate brokers or property owners we work with, Pangea will receive an advertising fee from the developer/broker/property owner.
